- 2.1. Themes: Social inequality in Brazil interpreted in the light of Pierre Bourdieu's theory; globalization of agriculture and social inequalities; globalization and cultural superdiversity.

Globalization, understood as a worldwide process of economic, sociopolitical, spatial and cultural integration, has generated forms of uneven development in peripheral capitalist countries: either at the level of land concentration and the inequalities this generates, or in the production, distribution and consumption of cultural capital or even the forms of intellectual production in spaces of power and domination. These dimensions will be analyzed in the light of the new international division of labor; from a theoretical perspective that is key to discuss current cultural capital and the relationship between superdiversity and global cultural processes.
